Brussels Becomes City of Hospitals

Toll of Suffering Levies Heavy Task Upon Wonderful Organization-Efficiency and Order Mark Belgian Efforts to Relieve the Victims From Battlefield.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Brussels is today a city of hospitals, and every hour its citizens see the toll of suffering steadily mounting up. But Brussels is also a city of beutiful order. It is performing its great work task of relieving the agonies of the wounded calmly and "Outwardly," says Miss J. L. Findlay, a young English woman who just returned to London after a week's visit to the Belgian capital. "Brussels seems less affected by the war than Paris. The cafes are open, the tramcars are running, and business is continued save here and there where a boarded shop front recalls the tumult which drove German traders away when the war began.

"I heard of one lady who had a hundred beds fitted up for soldiers in her own mansion. Provision has been made in one place and another for people with the soldier was lifted to his horse by some comrades who had fallen. He heard his commanding officer appeal for mercy for his wounded men, but this was increased in one place and another for people wounded." Miss Findlay, who has many influential friends in the city, was permitted to make a tour of the Hospital de St. Jean, the largest of the Brussels hospitals, where Dr. Leon Saroleo, brother of the author of the much discussed book on the Anglo-German problem, is in charge. She talked with some of the soldiers, and heard with some of the soldiers, and heard many vivid narratives of the fighting around Liene from their own lips. The Religian and cut off the first man was wounded and his leg was broken. As he lay on the ground he saw who ad fallen.
